Wolves' Daniel Podence Charged With Spitting

The Football Association have charged Wolves winger Daniel Podence with an alleged spitting incident during their 1-1 draw against Nottingham Forest on Saturday. The standard punishment for such offenses is a six-match ban.

Podence, who scored Wolves' equaliser during the game, has until Wednesday April 12 to address the charge. Forest and their assistant managers Alan Tate and Pablo Sanz are also being investigated by police.

Podence denies spitting

Wolves winger Daniel Podence has been charged by the FA with spatting at Nottingham Forest attacker Brennan Johnson during their 1-1 draw. This act of misconduct and/or violence was deemed "improper and/or violent" by the FA, with referee Chris Kavanagh taking no action despite a video review ruling.

Podence, a versatile attacking midfielder/winger, has been with Wolves since January 2020 and has made 40 competitive appearances for the club.

He's a versatile player, capable of filling any position behind the striker and making an impact when Nuno Espirito Santo's side needs it most.

Podence apologises

On Saturday night, Wolves winger Daniel Podence was charged by the Football Association with spitting at Nottingham Forest's Brennan Johnson during their 1-1 draw. Podence was accused of doing so in the 90th minute but wasn't sent off.

Spitting occurred in the dying seconds of an intense Premier League match, as Wolves trailed Forest by a goal and were fighting to avoid dropping to fourth place. Podence equalised for Wolves in the 83rd minute, nullifying Johnson's first-half opener.

Podence was accused of spitting by the Forest man, yet was ultimately cleared by video assistant referee (VAR) after a check. Now, the FA have announced they will investigate this incident and determine whether a red card should have been issued.

If found guilty, Podence faces a six-match ban. Forest assistant Alan Tate and Wolves counterpart Pablo Sanz have also been charged by the FA for their actions in the 52nd minute and have until April 12 to respond to these charges.

Podence resigns

The Football Association has charged Daniel Podence with spitting during Wolves' 1-1 draw at Nottingham Forest. A VAR check ruled it inconclusive, but Podence could face a six-match ban if found guilty.

At the City Ground, Forest and Wolves were locked in a heated Premier League relegation battle that saw Forest draw 1-1. Referee Chris Kavanagh took no action when video footage appeared to indicate Podence had spit at Johnson, who had scored the opening goal for Forest in the first-half.

The FA have also charged Forest assistant Alan Tate and Wolves coach Pablo Sanz with their involvement in the melee after the match. All three men have until April 12 to respond.

Podence slams FA

Podence was charged by the FA after Forest's Brennan Johnson claimed he spit at him during Saturday's 1-1 draw. This incident occurred in the 90th minute and was viewed by VAR; however, referee Chris Kavanagh took no action.

Spitting is usually punished with a six-match suspension, which would be devastating for Wolves as they strive to avoid being drawn into the relegation zone. Podence, who scored the equaliser against Forest, has until April 12 to respond to the charge.

Forest have been charged by the FA for failing to control their players during the match. After referee Kavanagh saved their penalty appeals when Emmanuel Dennis' cross appeared to strike Nelson Semedo on the hand, they surrounded him in the 40th minute and attempted to surround assistant managers Alan Tate and Pablo Sanz as well.
